

SIXTH EDITION

Business Communication

THEORY AND APPLICATION

 LESIKAR • PETTIT

CONTENTS

PART I

Communication Theory 1

1 The Role of Communication in the Business Organization 3

An essential to organized activity. The high frequency of communication. Communication illustrated: Dan's half hour. Main forms of organizational communication: Internal-operational communication. External-operational communication. Personal communication. The organization's communication network. A preview to the presentation.

2 A Model of the Communication Process 16

A common misconception. The communication environment: Sign detection. Sensory limitations. Selective perception. Varying alertness and perception. The communication process: Reception of signals. Flow to the brain. Role of the filter. The symbolizing stage. Act of encoding. The cycle repeated. The model and written communication: Greater creativity. Time lag. Limited numbers of cycles. Universal ingredients of human communication: The communication environment. The mental filter. The encoding and decoding processes. Some fundamental truths of communication: Communication is imperfect. We communicate about ourselves. Meaning is in the mind.

3 Perception and Reality 31

Reality defined: Reality with substance. Reality without substance. The reality of events. Position relationships. The infinity of reality: Infinity in a sheet of paper. Limiting effects on perception. Some applications in communication. Uniqueness in everything: Uniqueness illustrated. Effects on perception. Applications of uniqueness in communication. All in process: Changes in inanimate things. Changes in living things. Error effect on perception. Changing reality and business communication. Relative nature of perception. Truth and reality.

4 The Filter of the Mind 45

A storehouse of knowledge. The role of opinions, attitudes, and beliefs: What the terms mean. How viewpoints are formed. How viewpoints affect communication. The influence of emotions. The filter summarized.

5 Words and Meaning 57

Language and human progress: The foundation of language. Classification based on similarity. Illustration: "Fido" and the "economy." Illustration: Words about "mosquito." Two basic observations. The question of meaning: Location in the mind. Meaning and dictionaries. The living nature of language. Connotative and denotative meaning. Context as an aid to meaning. As the map fits the territory.

6 Some Malfunctions of Communication 72

Two-valued thinking. The true dichotomy. Multivalued situations. The danger involved. Value of specific reference. Applications in business communication. Fact-inference confusion: Need for inferences. Effect on communication. Calculating the probabilities. Importance in business communication. The blocked mind: A result of opinions, attitudes, and beliefs. A result of illness. Extreme effects of the blocked mind. Unblocking the mind. Effects in business communication. The static viewpoint: The unstatic nature of things. The contributing factor of language. The static viewpoint in business communication. Failure to discriminate: Miscommunication from stereotypes. Judgments by category. Developing an awareness of differences. Discrimination failure and business communication. Miscommunication summarized.

Elements of Business Writing 93

7 Principles of Clear Business Writing 95

The basic principle of adaptation. The filter as the basis for adaptation. The technique of adapting. Cases of adaptation. The governing role of adaptation. Care in word choice: Selecting words the reader will understand. Bringing writing to life with words. Selecting words for precise communication. Avoiding sexist words. Emphasis on short sentences: Limiting sentence content.

Economizing on words. Determining emphasis in sentence design. Giving the sentences unity. Arranging sentences for clarity. Care in paragraph design: Giving the paragraph unity. Keeping the paragraph short. Putting topic sentences to good use. Omitting unnecessary detail. Making the paragraph move forward. A word of caution.

8 Qualities of Effective Correspondence 131

Objectives of the business letter: The primary goal. The public relations. Conversational style: Tendency to be formal. The "language of business." Use of "rubber stamps." The you-viewpoint. Definition. The you-viewpoint illustrated. Accent on positive language: Effects of words. Examples of word choice. Overall tone of courtesy: Singling out your reader. Refraining from preaching. Doing more than is expected. Avoiding anger. Showing sincerity: Overdoing goodwill. Avoiding exaggeration. Techniques of emphasis: Emphasis by position. Emphasis by space. Emphasis by sentence structure. Emphasis by mechanical means. Coherence in the letter: Tie-in sentences. Repetition of key words. Use of pronouns. Transitional words. A word of caution. Writing for effect in international correspondence: Problems of cultural differences. Problems of language. Two basic suggestions. An approach to letter problems: Determination of primary objective. Selection of direct or indirect plan. Choice of the middle ground. The plans illustrated. The structure of the letter. Ethics and public relations writing. A concluding and forward look.

Correspondence 169

9 Situations Requiring Directness 171

The direct inquiry: A question beginning. Adequate explanation. Structured questions. Goodwill in the ending. Direct inquiries illustrated. Inquiries about people: Privileged communication. Question content. Personnel inquiries illustrated. Favorable responses. Situation identification. Good-news beginnings. Construction of answers. Handling negatives. Consideration of "extras." Cordiality in the close. Favorable responses illustrated. Order acknowledgments: Acknowledgment in the beginning. Goodwill talk and resale. A friendly, forward look. Order acknowledgments illustrated. Personnel evaluations: Directness in the opening. Systematic presentation of facts. The problem of fair reporting. Natural friendliness in the close. Personnel evaluations illustrated. Claim letters: Directness despite negativeness. Need for identifying facts. Forthright statement of the problem. Explanation of facts. Choice in handling the error. Doubt-removing friendliness in the close. Claim letters illustrated. Adjustment grant: Need to overcome negative impressions. Direct presentation of decision. Avoidance of negatives. Regaining lost confidence. Happiness in the close. Adjustment grants illustrated. Order letters: Clear and forthright authorization. Specific coverage of the sale. A cordial close. An order illustrated.

Letter problems—1

Direct inquiries. Favorable responses. Inquiries, prospective employees. Personnel evaluations. Claims. Adjustment grants. Orders.

10 Indirect Situations 246

Refused request: Strategy development. Opening contact and setup of the plan. Presentation of the reasoning. Positive handling of the refusal. Off-subject goodwill close. Request refusal illustrated. Adjustment refusals: Determining of basic strategy. Setting up the reasoning. Presentation of reasoning. Positive coverage of refusal. Off-subject closing talk. Adjustment refusals illustrated. Vague and back orders: Consideration in handling. Opening possibilities. Tact in handling delayed shipment. A pleasant ending picture. Delayed order handling illustrated. Credit refusals: Strategy and the reason for refusal. The buffer beginning. Justification of the refusal. Tact in the refusal. A closing forward look. Credit refusal illustrated.

Letter problems—2

Refused requests. Adjustment refusals. Credit refusals. Acknowledgments of vague and back orders.

11 Persuasive Requests and Collections 287

Persuasive requests: Determination of persuasion. Attention in the opening contact. Presentation of the persuasion. Goodwill and action in the close. Illustration of different approaches. Collection letters: A series of efforts. Determining the collection series. Using computer-generated collections. Early-stage efforts. Middle (persuasion) stage. Last-resort letters.

Letter problems—3

Persuasive requests. Collections.

12 Sales and Applications 321

Sales letters: Value of sales writing. Need for preliminary knowledge. Determination of appeal. An approach to the subject. Some mechanical differences. The attention-getting opening.

Completeness of the sale. Clarity and motion in the action. Urgency in the action. Recall of the appeal. Addition of a postscript. Examples for study. Use of a second letter in the mailing. Applications for employment: Preliminary planning. The resume. Letters of application. Other letters regarding employment.

Letters problems—4

Sales. Applications.

13 Memorandums 377

The nature of memorandums: Variations in form. Wide range of formality. Similarity of principles in memorandums and letters. Memorandums illustrated: Direct memorandums—routine inquiries. Direct memorandums—routine responses. Direct memorandums—policy memorandums and directives. Indirect (bad news) memorandums. The memorandum to file.

Memorandum problems

Direct memorandums (inquiries) Direct memorandums (information presentations). Policy memorandums, directives. Indirect memorandums (bad news).

PART IV

Business Report Writing 397

14 Reports: Problems, Organization, and Interpretation 399

An orientation to reports: Special needs of reports. Reports defined. Determining the report purpose: The preliminary investigation. Clear statement of problem. Determination of factors. Use of subtopics in information reports. Hypotheses for problems of solution. Bases of comparison in evaluation studies. Need for subbreakdown. Gathering the needed information. Applying the findings to the problem. Organizing the report information: Preliminary steps in determining order. Written outline. Patterns of report organization. System of outline symbols. Nature and extent of outlining. Introductory and concluding parts. Organization by division. Division by conventional relationship. Combination and multiple division possibilities. Wording the outline for report use. Interpreting information: Human frailties and interpretation error. Fallacious interpretation procedures. Attitudes and practices conducive to sound interpreting. Statistical aids to interpretation. Interpreting for the reader. Orderly procedure in interpreting.

- 19 Additional Oral Communication Activities 632
Conducting and participating in meetings: Techniques for conducting meetings. Techniques for participating in a meeting. Interviewing people: Guidelines for the interviewer. Guidelines for the interviewee. Dictating letters and reports: Techniques of dictating. Letter dictation illustrated. Using the telephone: Need for favorable voice quality. Techniques of courtesy. Effective telephone procedures. Listening: Inefficiency of listening. Improving your listening ability.
Problems—for meetings, interviewing, dictating, telephoning, and listening.
- 20. Nonverbal Communication 646
The model of communication applied to nonverbal communication. Definition. Classification of nonverbal communication: Kinesics. Proxemics. Time language. Paralanguage. Physical context. A concluding look at nonverbal communication.
- 21 Technology of Business Communication 661
Early development of communication technology: Innovations of the early years. Evolution of the conventional office. Advent of electronic and other technology: Revolutionary electronic innovations. Changes resulting from the new technology. How word processing works. Use of computers to improve writing. Availability of model letters databases. Expanded role of copiers and telephones. Advances in electronic mail. Progress in teleconferencing. Integration of existing technologies. A look to the future.

APPENDIXES

- Appendix A: Physical Presentation of Reports 676
- Appendix B: Form of the Business Letter 695
- Appendix C: Documentation and the Bibliography 706
- Appendix D: A Guide to Correctness in Writing 716
- Appendix E: A Checklist for Letter Grading 740
- Appendix F: A Grading Checklist for Reports 743
- Appendix G: Readability Measurement 747